

How can I start my action research?

Dialogue sheet Instructions for use

What is important for action research?

Which Action Research approaches and instruments do you find useful?

For what Action Research purposes are the different approaches and tools most useful and appropriate?

- This is a dialogue sheet – a table top thinking tool for sharing and exchanging thoughts and ideas.
- In a good dialogue we use and evolve on each other's thoughts – rather than presenting winning arguments.
- As you walk around the table, look at the pictures and think about the following questions:
 - What is important for action research?
 - Which Action Research approaches and instruments do you find useful?
 - For what Action Research purposes are the different approaches and tools most useful and appropriate?
- This sheet is your notepad. Write on it, make sketches and drawings on it, put your coffee on it.
- Alternatively write your comments on sticky notes to be clustered following discussions
- Consensus is not necessary, but write down all opinions.
- Address the tasks along the outside of the sheet as you go along. You don't have to consider the items in any particular order. Just move round the sheet and write down your thoughts.